Abstract. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no known cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a control group or a training group. The training group participated in a 12-week program of aerobic exercise, three times per week, for 45 minutes per session. The control group did not participate in any exercise program. Physical fitness was measured at baseline and at 12 weeks using a variety of tests, including a maximal aerobic power test, a submaximal aerobic power test, and a series of endurance tests. Health was measured using a series of questionnaires that assessed lifestyle factors, such as smoking, alcohol consumption, and diet. The results of the study showed that the training group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and better health than the control group at 12 weeks. The training program had a positive effect on the subjects' physical fitness and health, and it was concluded that such a program is beneficial for sedentary middle-aged men.
